

The exchange of letters within aristocratic or princely circles in the early modern period is not a new field of research. The letters of aristocratic women, however, have been studied less extensively than those of aristocratic men, although new approaches to women's letter-writing have begun to correct this imbalance. More particularly, and surprisingly given its rich potential, scholars have not given due attention to the correspondence of the Habsburgs. This workshop, focusing on the period from 1519 to 1700, will bring together researchers studying the letters and epistolary practices of both branches of the Casa de Austria. The seminar will examine both letters between family members as well as letters to and from office-holders and confidants who belonged or had access to the inner circle of the imperial family. The workshop will concentrate on such topics as the expression of emotions; letters as a means of education and of inculcating dynastic values; descriptions of courtly life, architecture, and travel; and religious practices at Habsburg courts.
